To Whom It May Concern:

I have been deeply distressed by the Department of Justice's legal attacks on Microsoft, a private company that has set the standard for quality products at reasonable prices. I am convinced Microsoft has played a large part in the productivity increases in the United States the last 5 years that have raised our standard of living to a level that makes us the envy of the entire world.

I can think of nothing but jealousy and greed being behind the legal attacks that I am convinced was started with the encouragement of Microsoft competitors. Don't we have better things to do in this country than attack one of the most successful and innovative companies in American history? Lets get back to fighting our real enemies, both at home and abroad ?poverty, poor public education, crime, the Taliban, etc. . I shutter to think of what would come of these if we directed the time and resources used in this frivolous case towards these true threats to the American way of life.

If the DOJ can do this to Microsoft, who is next? Get over the success of Microsoft and get on to other real issues that challenge this country.
